Hire Contract Ext Js Developer

There is a world of AJAX libraries available. They are powerful .They let us make great websites. They provide slick and sexy interfaces.

However, some of us don't want that. After all, slick and sexy is what resulted in the <blink> tag. Some of us want to make desktop-like applications on the web. Our numbers are growing quickly — just look at Google and Microsoft. There was a time when Google Maps blew our minds, and it won't be long before you open a browser to use Microsoft Office. These rich interactions, however, are complex and challenging to implement. There is a solution. It is called ExtJS.

The ExtJS JavaScript framework allows developers to easily implement desktop functionality on the web. It provides a base library for all those little things: "finding and manipulating DOM elements, making AJAX requests, managing events and listeners, and a whole mess of other trivial and mundane JavaScript tasks. However, where ExtJS really shines is with its portfolio of feature-rich widgets. There is a whole set of components that have lived on the desktop since the early days of the GUI, but somehow seem strange and new to web developers. How did we live without tree interfaces, drag and drop, and the oh so important interactive data grid? It is time to take back the browser.

Ext JS Overview

Ext JS is a cross-browser JavaScript library for building rich internet applications. It includes:

- High performance, customizable UI widgets
- Well designed and extensible Component model
- An intuitive, easy to use API
- Commercial and Open Source licenses available

Cost Per Programmer	$1750 / Month
Time	8 Hours Day, 5 Days a Week - Monday to Friday.
Minimum Contract Durations	4months
Holidays (Paid)	Saturday, Sunday and Indian National and Regional Holidays.
